An Indian Proffren. Maj. McLeave is estabhimself a reputation for Indian lighting that will being his services in this respect, into great demand in this Department. His pursuit and chastisement of the hand which robbed the the liest of his exploits in this line that came to our knowledge. The incidents connected with that effort are well known and gave the Major much credit.

The official note which we published in the Ga- Ana." last week shows that he has been at work again and the Indians have felt the good effects of way of attending to thur case. We have been monasion of some of the facts connected with this occurrence, which, being in a high degree creditable to all concerned in it, we will here put as record, thereby not only doing justice to those who are entitled to it, but also placing it before others as an example worthy of imitation.

On the 23d of March a party of Apachq Indiana made a descent upon the horses which were being grazed near Fort West. It being near night and the Indiana being more numerous than the guard they succeeded in possesing themselves of the grea ted and better portion of the heard and before the slarm reached the Fort had made off to the moun tains with them. Maj. McLeave determined that if they made secure their booty they should not do so without trouble. He accordingly had what horses and mules were left at the Fort gathered mp, and made preparations for starting in pursuit early on the morning of the 24th. He had his company prepare themselves with seven days carried on the horses and makes much man carrying his quota. Thus equipped he started apon the pursuit. The first day nothing of inter est transpired, except those incidents which always attend murches of this churapter. At night were apparently far behind the murauders were pursuing. An early start was much the next morning and the animals put to the best specil of which they were capable. But the execon was too great furthem, and during the day some of them broke down. When this bappened it seemstoned no delay to the party but it death to the animal. As soon as one became exhausted his throat was cut and the carcase left on the way. At night of this day the company were still far behind the objects of their pursuit. The third day was a repetition of the experiences of the second, except that the loss of animals was greater in proportion to the additional amount of exertion that was required of them. When the halt was ordered for the night the 'trail ledicated that they had very materially gained upon the Indians. The morning of the fourth day found a large part of the company dismounted and horseless, ong whom was the Major. They notwithstanding, determined not to abandon the pursuit, although the prospects had begun to wear a discouraging aspect. The darkest hour always pre-The gallant hand had the entisfaction of og within eight of the Indians at the close of their fourth and most wearisome day's march. The Indians were in one of their villages or rancherias, which, as they thought, was so far from the hounts of white men that they were perfectly secure and were consequently of their guard. Observing this, until morning, in a position out of the view of the Indians, and then make an attack upon thom.

It is, we ballere, the intention of the rated by the red skins. The Indians rashperpetrated by the red same. The thumans and ed to their arms and made a bold defence. But as the presence of the whites was unusual in that sociaded spot, so was it irresistable to those who were familiar with the meanderings of the Rio Bonito.
